

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Even when a node which can be moved among different networks and which sends a packet including a private address as a sender address sends the packet in either of networks, the sender address of the packet sent by the node is changed to a same global address. It can prevent that a correspondent node determines a packet from a same node as a packet from a different node due to a difference in their sender addresses, which hardly interrupts communication.